June 30 - July 1 • Xian
This evening, savor the imperial cuisine. (b,l,d)

July 2 • Beijing - Xian
Not content to remain mere observers of the grandeur of China, you are going to learn how it is done. (It's not as simple as it looks.) The magnificent terracotta figures were created to commemorate the fourth emperor of China's first dynasty, the Qin Dynasty. The emperor was buried with a terracotta army that was designed to protect him in the afterlife. This grandiose project was carried out using a team of 7,000 artisans, craftsmen, and laborers. The figures were made to resemble the emperor's ministers, guards, and personal staff. The soldiers are depicted in battle array, with weapons at the ready. When the emperor died, so did his army. The figures were buried with the emperor to ensure his protection in the afterlife.
