

Volunteers who Roar.

Nene Kalu '07 isn't kidding when she says, "I like to do a lot." Never having been to the West, after graduation she took off for San Francisco, where she threw herself into the life of the city. A Near Eastern Studies major, she became interested in technology and now leads efforts on data analysis programs. Away from the computers, she's a producer, writer, and director with Scary

Nene Kalu '07

Cow Productions, a film co-op.

When she first arrived in San Francisco, she wanted to meet more people and immediately tracked down the Princeton Club of Northern California. She introduced herself to the Young Alumni Chair, and four months later she became the Young Alumni Chair herself. She organizes the monthly Young Alumni Happy Hours and was the driving force behind a "Welcome to the Bay Area" event for recent graduates last fall. She already had a history of donating her time: Even while writing an award-winning thesis on Islamic practices among Pakistani women, she was a Sexual Harassment/Assault peer advisor, a volunteer with teenage mothers in Trenton, and a tutor at Princeton High School.

"I try to embody the University's motto—Princeton in the nation's service—because I saw that the University really cares. It's not just lip service."

In any conversation with Caitlin Sullivan '07 that revolves around Princeton, two words stand out: commitment and community. In fact, Princeton's commitment to service first appealed to Caitlin when she was choosing a college. She returned the commitment by serving as Academics Chairperson of USG, an RCA in Wilson, co-captain of the women's varsity golf team and a senior class captain for Annual Giving '07.

Caitlin Sullivan '07

And it has been the Princeton community that has shaped her life as a young alumna in Washington, DC. Caitlin began working at CityBridge Foundation, a nonprofit with strong Princeton ties, as a Project 55 fellow. Beyond the office, she sought out the local Princeton community through the

"I would not have found Miriam's Kitchen if it were not for the Princeton Club of Washington's community service program. Now, serving at Miriam's is always more fun when there are other Tigers in the kitchen!"

Princeton Club of Washington (PCW). She has been DC's Young Alumni Chair, sits on the Club's council, and also chairs the DC Steering Committee for Project 55. And every other Wednesday, Caitlin serves as a sous chef at Miriam's Kitchen, a social service agency in Foggy Bottom to which PCW sends alumni volunteers on a regular basis.

Alumni life is rich and rewarding.
Explore the many ways to stay in touch!

<http://alumni.princeton.edu>

The Alumni Association of Princeton University. More Than 80,000 Served.

