Liz Ramey’s first Reunion experience was in 2013, the year she completed her MPA at the Woodrow Wilson School. She went back for Reunions in 2014 – by then she was hooked. When she received an APGA survey asking if she would like to volunteer, she quickly signed on to the APGA Reunion Committee.

“It’s my personality to want to jump in and do things. I was once voted ‘Most Involved’ in high school! And this year is special: The year of the Woo. I want to be part of encouraging alums to come back, to show their loyalty.”

Showing loyalty to the Woo is personal for Liz. From the moment she first arrived in 2011, she recalls, she felt the support from all areas of the Woodrow Wilson School – professors, administrators, and students alike. “The University truly invests in its students. It cares on an individual level. I am very glad that I chose Princeton.”

Now she is working on various decorations for the APGA Reunion, decorations for the tables and for the attendees. “The P-rade costumes will be great. We will be marching in foam top hats and pince-nez glasses. Very Woodrow Wilson!”

When Jason Ray volunteered to chair the Class of 2014’s first Reunion, he had a pretty good idea what he was getting himself into. He had raised his hand for the Rockey-Mathey Dining Services team for his freshman year Reunions stint. He was crew manager for the Class of ’92’s 20th Reunion his sophomore year and again crew manager his junior year, this time for the Class of ’93’s 20th Reunion. “When you first work any Reunion, it is definitely hard work. But by the time I was managing the crew in 2013, my assistant crew manager Greg Sotereanos ’14 and I knew what we wanted, and with our great crew it all ran smoothly.”

Now he is chairing his own Reunion. “My past experience, serving with different Reunion chairs, has been invaluable. It has helped inform the planning and the managing of schedules and of personalities so that we come up with the best solutions. This all is so rewarding, and so much fun! The great relationship with the University makes it easy. Our housing allotment is generous, and we get to use Frist Lawn for our BBQ. And coordinating with the 5th Reunion crew for registration has worked really well. We are expecting about 1,000 classmates back.”

Jason smiles. “Princeton really knows how to build excitement!”
